acquainted with the difficulties in the way of preparing the first Directory for a large city, it is believed that the second would probably be more surprised to find it in any respect perfect. Nothing has intentionally been left out, that could add either to the interest or value of the work.

The greatest exertion has been made, to give the names of Germans and other Old Country people, in the orthography of these names, owing to the fact, that many are unable to spell their own names, in English. It is hoped, however, that instances of this kind will not be found to be numerous. In subsequent editions, it is hoped, that the names of persons who avoid these in this volume.

Chicago, it is to be remembered, is yet in its infancy, and subject to fluctuation in its population and business, more so than any other city in the Union. So far as this is true, a Directory of the city, will be less useful. It is believed, however, that the interest and utility of the work, will be less felt here, than in any other city. Our citizens are becoming sensible of the importance of fixed habitations, and places of business—and will speedily take measures to themselves the benefit and advantage of such establishments. There is to a considerable extent, a feeling of dissatisfaction with the present season. Nearly all of our population will hereafter, at least for many years, be permanently located. Hoping that the book may be made in many ways to subserve a useful purpose, and prove the City, it is most respectfully solicited, to the aid and co-operation, of its citizens. They will not, in this instance, forget their claims to this distinction, but will generously, and cheerfully, lend their aid and co-operation, to make the work, more interesting, designed to promote and advance the interests of the city, and to make the work, more interesting and useful, and those who have afforded information, and contributed their advice in furtherance of the design of publication, the author would, in conclusion, tender his most sincere thanks.

DESCRIPTION

AND

HISTORICAL SKETCH.

CHICAGO, Cook County, Illinois, is situated on the South-western shore of Lake Michigan, at the head of Lake navigation, in Jan. 41 deg., 45 sec., North, and long. 10 deg., 45 sec., West. The site of the City occupies a level prairie, on the right bank of the stream, and the left bank of the Chicago River, and is bounded on the South, east, two and a half in breadth, East and West, about a mile and a half square of which is already regularly built upon, and the streets opened and graded. The streets are regularly laid out, parallel and at right angles to the Lake, and are wide and spacious. There are several extensive blocks of brick buildings, principally occupied as business houses and places of business, principally four stories high. The buildings are principally of wood. The portion of the City extending several miles along the shore of the Lake, is sandy and consequently at all seasons, dry. The portion removed from the Lake partakes of the character of all level prairie, being in the spring and fall wet and muddy. The site of the City being a plain, does not afford either the Lake or water surrounding country, a very interesting view. The Chicago River, and all its tributaries, flow through the heart of the City, and at all seasons, vessels of every class navigating the Lake, some distance into the interior, afford peculiar facilities for a harbor, and give to Chicago advantages, in a commercial point of view, unsurpassed by any City in the West. The Illinois and Michigan Canal, which is shortly to be completed, will add greatly to the natural advantages of Chicago, making it a principal point, and necessitating a place of embarkation on the Great Lakes, and the Mississippi. The City is bounded on the South and West by a prairie, varying from ten to twelve miles in width, some portion of which is high, and of a very superior quality. It is surrounded in every direction, by a country the most productive in the world, recently brought into a state of successful cultivation, and sending to its market annually, a vast amount of produce of every description for sale, exclusive of food, and clothing, as the case may be. The climate is healthy and agreeable, as much so as any in the West. In 1837, Chicago became an incorporated City, the act of the legislature conferring its charter being granted and approved March 4th of that year. The City is divided into six wards. The first and second wards, Clark Street and Clark Street, are bounded by the West and East, and the second West of Clark Street. The third and fourth wards, divided by Randolph Street, are situated on the West side of the North and South Branches—the third South, and the fourth North of Randolph Street. The fifth and sixth wards, divided by Clark Street, are bounded by the North Branch, Chicago River, and the Lake—the fifth being Clark Street and the sixth East of Clark Street. The City is divided into twelve wards in a Common Council, and the Mayor and twelve Aldermen are elected annually. The Common Council, in addition to their other powers and duties, are constituted, by virtue of their office, Commissioners of Common Schools, with power to levy and collect taxes for their support, and to exercise a general supervision over matters pertaining to them. In 1832, and the beginning of 1833, Chicago had about 110 inhabitants and five or six log houses, exclusive of the Fort and its garrison. In 1840, the population was 1,343, and in 1850, it had increased to 8,800. The period of the greatest prosperity of Chicago, was from 1833 to 1837. The revolutions and reverses of '36-'7, greatly retarded its growth. It continued, however, though more gradually, to increase in business and resources until 1840-'1, from which time business received a new impulse, and it is now enjoying a degree of prosperity equal to any former period of its history.

What the destiny of Chicago is to be, no man can alone determine. Judging by its present, undoubtedly one of the most remarkable instances of sudden rise to commercial importance, to be found in our age. So rapid, indeed, has been its growth—with such gigantic strides has it moved onward in its career, that little space is left to mark and calculate the successive stages of its progress. We behold it, from a distant and isolated colony, inhabited by some five or six families clinging to rocks, and for centuries upon the uncertain spot for protection, and dependent from Mackinac, in the short space of eight or ten years, become a mighty City, teeming with a busy and enterprising population, the centre of a widely extended and flourishing commerce. To those who have been here from the beginning, and there are many among us, the change must be striking—the contrast between what is, and what was—great. Truly history, in this instance, has made a record of our dream. It seems difficult to conceive of a change so other than that the spot now covered with cities and lofty buildings, and alive in every direction with a numerous departments of our growing commerce, was, so recently, a low and marshy plain, of which the wild beasts of the prairie were almost the solitary tenants; that but yesterday, companies of wandering Indian held here his council-fire, and roamed around un molested in the enjoyment of the native life.

A country so recent as this cannot be presumed to abundant materials for history. The incidents, however, connected with the rise and progress of the City—the races which first gave it an impulse—and the works of public and domestic improvement, upon which its future prosperity depend, together with such events as transpired upon the spot, at an early day, may, perhaps, furnish a narrative not altogether uninteresting, and one which may claim an inconsiderable degree of antiquity. In regard to its earlier history, however, very little can be affirmed with any degree of certainty. The original proprietors and first inhabitants of the region, were, of course, the aborigines. The description of the first appearance of the vicinity, by some of its earliest explorers, leads to the belief, that they were here from a very early period; that this was, then, and even from time immemorial, has been, a place of rendezvous for the Menominee, Kickapoo, and other tribes, and the number and apparent intensity of the trails converging here, as evidence of the truth of this position. It is to be regretted that so little can be ascertained with certainty, of the lives and fortunes of the various tribes which, at different times, flourished on the spot. The melancholy truth, that we have passed away from their ancient dwelling-places, constitutes about all we know of them. Those wild races of primitive men have been swept and carried off by the march of civilization. The traces of their existence and dark causes have given place to the princely dwellings and the stately ships of another and a different class of beings. Chiefdom and warrior are gone. It is only occasionally that a wretched remnant find their way back from their new homes in the more distant west, to witness the transformation which is going on in this land of their forefathers. Their visits are becoming less and less frequent. Each year witnesses so many changes, that soon they will be recognized as a race, any traces of which will have been obliterated, and will be changed, in the bearing of the waves on the shore of the lake over which man exercises no control. The Illinois, the Shawnee, and the Pottawamies will be no more. They may survive for a time beyond the father of waters, or on the shores of the Pacific—but fate seems to have decreed, that ultimately the whole race are to become extinct.

The French were the original discoverers and settlers of the West. The first Frenchmen who came to the spot, were the French Canadian voyageurs yet clinging to the shores of the Atlantic, almost two hundred years ago, their voyages and expeditions to this region commenced. In a few years they discovered, and to some extent, settled the whole vast region from Canada to the Gulf of Mexico, a distance of more than 3000 miles. Their undermining at that early day, was one of no little difficulty and danger. If even, nevertheless, commenced with a spirit, and carried on with a perseverance, the limits of the present sketch will not permit us to give the details of these expeditions. It would be unparaphrased, however, to pass over in silence the exploits of those brave and self-devoted men, through whose exertions the resources and capabilities of the West were first made known. It is to be feared that they have failed to retrace, at the laud of posterity, the reward to which their achievements entitle them; that, while we have been lavishing praise upon the discoverers of other portions of our country, we have failed to pay statue honors to the memory of these first pioneers in the settlement of Illinois—these pilgrim fathers of the West. If, to penetrate the wilderness, these men were to be regarded as the first, for months to the comforts of home, braving hunger and thirst, and then these men have distinguished claims upon us for the reaping the fruits of all their toils and distinguished, were those of these expeditions. La Salle. The former occurred in the year 1673, Marquette and La Salle. The latter in the year 1680. The expedition of La Salle, in the discovery of the Mississippi, the original object and design of the expedition. To this expedition, it is probably to be ascribed the honor of paying the first visit to Chicago, it being the prevailing opinion that it passed through here on its return to Canada, according the Illinois River and crossing the Michigan River. Perrot, by some writers, is believed to have been in Michigan a few years earlier. The story of the discovery of the Mississippi, which was the Illinois River, and found at last a solitary grave on the eastern shore of Michigan, at the mouth of a river bearing his name, is familiar to all.

With the expedition of La Salle, in 1680, Chicago cannot be so clearly identified. This expedition, however, was probably the more important consequence to the settlement of Illinois, than the preceding one. The Mississippi was now open to its mouth: forts at favorable points, chained the shores of the great Lakes thoroughly to the commerce of the interior. At several points, commenced: expeditions which succeeded those of Marquette and La Salle. The expedition of La Salle, in 1680, was the first of a series of minor importance, being principally designed to sustain the colonies already planted, and to prosecute the traffic which had previously been entered into with the natives. Although the expedition was frequently interrupted by the Indians, who were not without success in harassing their passages to and from the settlements. It was once seen here, they must ever after have appreciated the advantages of the situation, both in a commercial and military point of view. Their sagacity in these matters seldom failed them. "In their magnificent scheme of a chain of military posts, connecting Canada and the Gulf of Mexico, Chicago, doubtless, formed an important link, being at the head of the Lakes, and affording so many facilities to attain the object of their enterprise. The French Colonies in the West, which were maintained by emigration, continued from the time which they assumed at a later period, they were among the frequent subject of grants from the crown, to individuals and companies. About 1717, they are found the property of the celebrated Mississippi Company, which, at the time, gave place to much speculation throughout Europe. At the close of the French and Indian War, Louisiana was transferred to the English, comprising the present State of Illinois, becoming the westernmost territory of Virginia, by which State of Illinois, became a part of the territory of Virginia, under the name of the Illinois Territory.

Virginia ceded it to the General Government at the time of the cession of Western lands, by the Eastern States. In 1800, the present State of Illinois became a part of "Indiana Territory," having a population of about 3000. In 1809, it became a Territory by itself, with a population of 19,292, and in 1813, was admitted into the Union.

On the third day of August, 1795, at the treaty held by General Wayne with the Potawatamies and other tribes at Chicago, the title to the land was ceded to the United States. It is expressed in the treaty, was obtained by the United States, from the language of this treaty, it appears that a fort had formerly stood on the land thus ceded, which renders it pretty certain, that the French, who alone could have required anything of the sort, had made a settlement here, many years before. In 1804, Fort Chicago was built on the site of the present Fort. About the same time, a trading post was established at the mouth of the Illinois River, before established a trading station, under the protection of the Garrison. The little colony thus planted here, some forty years ago, for military and trading purposes, may be regarded as the first attempt to effect a permanent settlement of Chicago. The regular and monotonous life led by this little community, for the first eight years, afforded few incidents worthy of particular notice. In 1812, however, the people came out with magnificent consequences of which they were especially those in Illinois, to the hostility of neighboring tribes of Indians. The causes which conspired to render the Indians hostile at this time, are generally well understood, and may be traced to the machinations of Tecumseh, and other English emissaries, whose influence extended through all the tribes, being felt as far as the remote regions of Lake Superior. Chicago being then in the direction round it, full of Indians, with a force inadequate to its defence, was considered so much endangered as to require its evacuation. This being resolved upon at Detroit, Capt. Haskin, the officer in command here at the time, received an order to abandon the Fort, and to command the troops to Fort Wayne. This evacuation, on account of the final consequences which followed it, and the fact that some of our present citizens were themselves here, and had been present at the evacuation, has been a memorable event in the annals of Chicago. The transaction may, therefore, not inappropriately be given somewhat in detail, in this connection. Beside the Garrison, there were several families residing here at the time. Mr. John Koestel, father of John H. Koestel, Esq., present Register of the Land Office to this day, occupied a house on the North side of the River, a little East of the present site of the State Capitol. He was a Frenchman, and was the first of the race to settle here after the reception of the order from Gen. Hull, and the day before the disgraceful surrender of Detroit, by that officer, and out after, as some writers have erroneously represented it. In the mean time, a larger body of Indians, mostly of the Potawatamie nation, had assembled in the vicinity of the Fort. This has generally been represented as a voluntary movement on the part of the Indians—but the most correct opinion appears to be, that they had been incited from the East, and that the victory seems a considerable portion of which, were in hand at the time. Whether this be the fact, or not, some understanding of the kind undoubtedly existed on the part of the Indians, and the non-fulfillment of the agreement, by Capt. Heald, according to their expectations, may have occasioned the line of conflict which they subsequently adopted, which proved fatal to the lives of 55 of the party, and had well nigh brought about the destruction of the whole. The soldiers had been brought about the destruction of the whole, and some had been killed, and some had been wounded, and some had been taken prisoner. These it was deemed imprudent to give the Indians—and they were destroyed, a part being thrown into the River, and the residue deposited in a well within the Fort. One of the arms thus disposed of, a brass piece, was found a few years since, by some people employed in dredging the River—another, it is said, remains there to this day. The stores not destroyed were distributed to the Indians, and the circumstances, without more, would have occasioned the loss of the 55th of the party, and the loss of 54 regulars, 13 militia, and several families, amounting in all to about 70 persons, left the Fort, under the escort of Capt. Wells, and about 30 Miami Indians. Their route lay along the beach of the Lake, between the water on the left, and a succession of sand hills on the right. They had proceeded about a mile and a half from the Fort, and had attained a point a short distance beyond the present residence of Mr. H. H. Wells, and were advancing, under cover of the sand hills, when the Indians, who were following them, discovered the Indians in ambush behind the sand hills. At the same time, another party was seen interposing in the rear, between them and the Fort, which they had just left. The alarm was immediately given—the dead march struck up, and the troops marched directly up the bank, upon the Indians. The action did not commence, as has generally been represented, by firing, on the part of the Indians. After firing one volley, they retreated, and the troops followed them to the foot of the sand hills. But the scarcity of numbers was too great. The most determined bravery was displayed by the troops, but it could avail little against the superior force opposed to them, protected by the sand hills behind which it had entrenched itself. In 15 minutes, nearly the whole party were killed or wounded, and all the baggage in the possession of the enemy. Capt. Heald drew off his men, into the open prairie, and took possession of a high, narrow ridge, upon each side of which, and very close to the Fort, the Indians afterwards entrenched themselves.

He was met by a Powawamie Chief, called Blackbird, who requested him to surrender, promising to spare the lives of the whole party, in case of compliance. After some parley, the terms were agreed to, and the arms delivered up. The survivors were marched back to the Indian encampment near the Fort, about the spot where State Street now opens to the River, and where the present residence of Mr. H. H. Wells stands. The survivors, who had been wounded, were treated in the most shocking manner, by the squaws, who appeared to take great delight in exercising their knives and besmearing them in the blood of their unfortunate victims. The small number surviving, were distributed, according to the custom of the savages, among the different members of the tribe. Mr. Kinzie, Sen., however, whose family, from the first, had been protected by some friendly chiefs, although he was himself engaged in the action, with the troops—succeeded in procuring the release of Capt. Heald and lady, who were sent by him to St. Joseph, and taken to Mackinac, whence they made their escape. The remainder of the party, who were not surrendered to the British at Detroit, in the following spring. The day following the action, the Indians burnt down the Fort, and dispersed. Such are the leading particulars of this unfortunate action, collected, principally, from eye-witnesses of the whole. Capt. Heald has been subjected to much blame, a portion of which was undoubtedly merited. His management of the Indians was injudicious throughout, and the action, under existing circumstances, was remonstrated against, by Mr. Kinzie and Capt. Wells, both of whom, from long intercourse with the Indians, had become familiar with their character, and were enabled to anticipate and forestall the result which ensued. Capt. Wells had been bred an Indian warrior, and was a brave and skilful soldier. He unfortunately fell early in the action, and was found dead, in the immediate neighbourhood of the Fort, and was most probably shot with disparagement.

The Fort was rebuilt in 1817, when it took the name of Fort Dearborn. It was occupied, except at short intervals, by a Garrison, until 1837, when, the Indians having generally left the country, it was finally evacuated, and has never since been re-occupied as a military post. It remains in much the same condition as in 1837, except the palisades, which were removed, the past spring, and the place supplied by a handsome fence. It has since been occupied by the officers and families of the troops, and by the families of Fort Dearborn being almost the only means of this past, in the midst of so many creations of the day—the necessity of any alteration in its appearance is to be regretted.

Until 1833, and even so late as 1833, little or nothing was done towards making a commencement of the City—it probably not entering into the imagination of any one, previous to that time, that there would be a city at Detroit, as there is at least, not for many years. In 1832, its appearance was improved, and it was, as in 1833, when Major Long, who visited the place that year, describes it, "as presenting no cheering prospect, and containing but few huts, inhabited by a miserable race of men, scarcely equal to the Indians, from whom they were descended—and their log or bark houses as low, filthy, and disgusting, displaying not the least trace of comfort, and as a place of business, affording no inducements to the commerce of the country, and no amount of trade on the Lake, not exceeding the exports of fire or six hundred barrels of flour. The garrison received its supplies from Mackinac." This picture, though perhaps too highly colored, presents, in the main, a correct view of Chicago, in 1832. In 1830, there had been a sale of Canal lots, the best bringing only fifty or one hundred dollars, many of which have since become the most valuable in the City. Up to about that time, the present most populous, and densely populated part of the City, was a prairie, and was used for the purpose of raising stock, and for pasturage. So late as '33 or '36, the first purpose of this prairie in the fall, overran the third and fourth wards. There were only some five or six houses, built, mostly of logs, and a population of less than one hundred.

One of these houses, formerly the property of the Fur Company, was, until a short time past, occupied by Col. Beaubien. About 80 rods to the south of that, stood a house, once occupied by Colonel Owings, but since washed away by the Lake. A house, known as "A Coburn place," on block No. 4, was formerly the abode of Dr. A. Coburn.

The dwelling of Mr. John Kinzie stood East of the Lake House. A log building at the corner of Dearborn and South Water Streets, and the once celebrated tavern of Mr. Mark Beaubien, on the site of the Sauganah, generally known as the Eagle, together with a building on block 14, and a cabin, occupied by Robinson, the Indian Chief at Wolf Point, constituted all the buildings, except the Fort, to be found here in 1833. The first frame building, the "Kinzie mill," was at Wolf Point, the first frame building in Chicago. In 1834, several brick buildings were erected.

The commerce of the place, up to this period, was equally insignificant. In fact, there was none, unless the traffic of the Fur Company, can be dignified with that name. Vessels occasionally ventured here, but so seldom, that the arrival of a schooner was an event of no little moment, and created a sensation throughout the community. The year 1832, may be regarded as the year of the Indian war among them; conspired about this time, to bring Chicago into general notice. What was called the "Western Fever," had begun to rage generally, throughout the country. Thousands were flocking from the East, to seek homes in the West. The first premonitions of the speculative mania, had manifested themselves. Eligible sites for towns and cities, were sought out, and eagerly appropriated. The superior advantages of Chicago, at this period, attracted the attention of the country, and was universally acknowledged to be the place, where the most rapid and extensive increase of public wealth, could not long escape public attention.

The attention of Congress had been called to the importance and necessity of a harbor, and an appropriation was confidently relied upon at the next session. Gen. Scott, who explored the country during the Indian war, took a lively interest in this work, and addressed a letter in relation to it, which was sent to the United States Congress. The interest of the Illinois and Michigan Canal, then, had been fully taken up by the State Legislature. Measures were being taken to survey the different routes, and to estimate the cost of the various plans proposed. Hence the commencement, and completion of this important work at no distant day, might confidently be relied upon. The resources of the State, were beginning to be more generally known, and better appreciated. The most alluring reports of the character of the soil and its productiveness—the facilities for commerce and the rapidity with which the same might be improved—were circulated far and wide. With the same views, numerous exertions were made, and with the most successful success, to promote emigration. Enterprise, stimulated by interest, and the hope of gain, was aroused, calling forth and concentrating upon this one object, all the resources and capabilities of the age. Capital was enlisted, and credit and unlimited confidence invoked to its aid. Money, owing to excessive bank, and even private issues, was abundant, and loans to any amount were effected with the greatest ease. The West suddenly became the centre of men's thoughts and wishes, and Chicago, as the most important point in the West, the goal to which all directed their aspirations.

Such are some of the prominent causes which may be said, at the period referred to, to have given the first impulse to the City. That it grew and prospered as it did, under their operation, will excite no surprise—the result could not have been otherwise.

Its progress, accordingly, was rapid. Buildings went up as if by magic—stores were opened by the hundred, and speedily filled with merchandise; people of every calling and pursuit in life, laborers, mechanics, and professional men, influenced by a common purpose—the hope of success in their several spheres of action—came together here, and entered at once with a zeal and activity into their respective important projects. In 1833, the site of the present city was projected. In 1835, the population of the place was said to amount to 5,500, a computation which probably included transitory persons, a great many of whom were engaged in the construction of the Canal. In 1836, another sale of Canal lots took place, which was attended with much excitement, and occasioned a large collection of people from distant quarters. The prices were extravagantly high. In 1836, a branch of the State Bank was located here. On the 4th of July, 1831, the ceremony of breaking the first ground on the Canal, took place at Canal Port, in presence of a large concourse of citizens, the Legislature, and the Governor. The same day, the City opened the State Legislature; and in April succeeding, the first election under the Charter was held, which resulted in the choice of W. B. COOPER to the office of Mayor. The growth of commerce, thus far, kept pace with everything else. The community were, dependent, during the first few years, entirely upon supplies from abroad; this, together with the great influx of emigrants, and the travel which engaged so many of the citizens, led to the establishment of a regular system of shipping, and Steamboats and Schooners began to ply regularly between this port and Buffalo.

During this brief but exciting period, the community fortunately found time to devote some attention to things of greater importance than the accumulation of this world's goods. Before or during 1836, as many as six Churches had been organized, and suitable buildings provided for their use. The City had also, at this time, received a liberal support, and are now in a flourishing condition. Neither was the subject of education wholly neglected. The school system, which fortunately lay contiguous to the City, and was proportionally valuable, was disposed of in 1834, and the assets applied to the support of Common Schools. Means for the diffusion of general intelligence were also provided for, and the publication of the Chicago Democrat; and in the following year, Thos. O. Davis established the Chicago American, both of which papers still exist: the later under the name of the Chicago Express, being published daily, and being purchased by the Prairie Farmer, Agriculturalist, the Western Mail, the North Western Baptist, the Baptist, and the Citizen Advocate, Universals, which have since been started, are able conducted, and have an extensive circulation.

The year 1837, is especially memorable in the annals of Chicago, as the period of protracted notes. It was during this year, that the consequences of speculation, which had hitherto operated most favorably for the West, were experienced to the full. The year 1838, was a year of depression, and the year 1839, a year of depression. It was in this incipient stages, at the period of the commencement of the City; but a disposition and tendency to it was apparent even then. It raged with great violence during '35-6, and a portion of '37, at which time it gave color and direction to most business transactions.

The history of this singular delusion is replete with instructive incidents. It seems unaccountable to the most sagacious, that in these times, when prudence, foresight, and sagacity could, to such an extent, have lost their dominion and control over the human mind. But so it was. The rapid and unprecedented rise in the value of real estate, and the certainty of that rise, exerted a most seductive influence; very few were found able to resist the temptation; all classes of people ultimately abandoning the salutary maxims of sobriety, temperance, and frugality, and indulging in the hazardous and ultimately ruinous speculations of the time. This wild spirit found conduct and policy of sin, as it had done that of individuals. It was under the influence of this spirit that those stupendous schemes of internal improvement originated in many of the new states, which have entailed upon subsequent times the ruin of debt and ruin. Speculation and extravagance, on all hands, of acts of extravagance, and in some cases, national extravagance, and the ruin of the nation, were the result. The sinners of the time, being regarded as inexhaustible, naturally created extravagant ideas of prosperity, and afforded to all the apparent means of indulging in every species of expenditure. It would be useless to follow speculation through its stages, as one act of absurdity followed another in rapid succession.—Are not these the consequences written in characters upon the memory of every reader's eye, and retribution was at hand. Confidence and credit, too long abused, refused any longer to lend their aid. The unfortunate victims of the delusion were suddenly awakened from their dream of wealth to the certainty of almost universal bankruptcy and ruin. Thousands suddenly called upon to meet the condition of their affairs, which, in their delusion, they had thought of thousands and hundreds of thousands of money, and their real estate, from which alone the means of payment could come, depreciated in value, in fact unsalable at any price. Thousands, from affluence, were reduced—without warning or preparation—to poverty; some struggled for a time, but in vain, and the evil day came at last; and scarcely one, ultimately, survived the catastrophe. The comparatively small number of those who did finally escape the ordeal, it has been observed were indebted more to chance and good luck than to any unusual endowments of sagacity or prudence. The great majority were, however, those in whose judgment and capacity in ordinary times, as far as unobscured by the most implicit confidence, ventured as far and hazarded as much as any in this dangerous game.

To Chicago, in an especial degree, was the stroke which was thus inflicted upon the business interests of the country injurious and calamitous. It was to her a season of mourning and desolation. Many of her most business and enterprising citizens, and all the ablest of her statesmen, were driven from their cities, and she had gone on hitherto in state of uninterrupted prosperity—nothing had thus far occurred to check the progress of improvement. Could that state of prosperity have continued, Chicago would, by this time, have ranked among the proudest cities of the land. But calamity came suddenly and unexpectedly; and, for a time, she quailed under its effects.

But she was too firm, and could not be entirely prostrated. Her position was too favorable, and her redeeming powers too abundant, to permit her very long to be seriously affected by any calamity, however great. She had, in common with the west, gained much by speculation. What had been accomplished could not be undone. Her works of improvement survived—her population was left to her, and more than all her great and inexhaustible natural resources remained to bear her on in the path of improvement. Her high destiny, from which the force of evil example had seduced them. Her business men, taught a severe lesson by the past, bent all their energies, and called into requisition all their experience to build up their injured credit, and to restore their business to a safe and permanent foundation. The consequences began gradually to develop themselves. But little was gained during '35, but in '36, things began to mend. A new era of improvement had begun. The west was more fully illustrated by a reference to the causes of different portions, and to the abstruse statements of the amount, value and character of the export and import trade at the place during each year, continued in another part of this volume.

It is with feelings of pride and satisfaction that the friends of Chicago can refer to the experience of the last few years, and the assistance of her people, and as establishing, beyond controversy, the existence and permanency of her sources of prosperity. It, with an impoverished community, at a period of general prostration of the business interests of the country, under the pressure of heavy national and enormous State liabilities, with resources comparatively undeveloped, and the wants of public improvement not reasonably expected to be met, and all obstacles are removed from her way! A glance at her geographical position will convince the most sceptical that Chicago is but the nucleus about which is destined to grow up, at no remote period, one of the most important commercial towns in the West. Situated on the waters of the only great

ADDENDA,

Confining the names of persons accidentally omitted above, and names handed in too late for insertion in the body of the Directory. The compiler cannot flatter himself that all omissions have been discovered in time to supply the deficiency by insertion in the addenda; but he trusts that the public will take such interest in the work, as to report to him, and also cases where names are included from this edition; and as soon as names are incorrectly given—cases of misdescription of business or residence, and all changes and removals which may hereafter take place.
